Ownership of a Letter.

Under the postal regulations of the United States and the rulings of the highest courts a letter does not belong to the person to whom it is sent until it is delivered to him.

The writer has a right to reclaim and regain possession of it, provided he can prove to the satisfaction of the postmaster at the office from which it was sent, that he was the writer of it.

Even after the letter has arrived at the office which is its destination, and before it has been delivered to the person to whom it is addressed, it may be recalled by the writer by telegraph through the mailing office.

The regulations of the postoffice department of course require that the utmost care shall be taken by the postmaster at the office of mailing to ascertain that the person who desires to withdraw the letter is really the one who is entitled to do so, and the postmaster is responsible for his error if he delivers the letter to an imposter or an unauthorized person.

The vital principle in our political system lies at the bottom of this matter. In this country the state is the servant or agent of the citizen—not his master. It remains merely his agent throughout the transmission of a letter. The state may prescribe regulations under which its own servants may carry a message for the citizen, but it cannot shrink its responsibility to him—YOUTH'S Companion.

Abandoned Farms a Blessing.

So far as has come under our notice, the well known general abandonment of hill farms in New England is almost universally bewailed. Though a sentiment of slight melancholy must usually attach to an abandoned homestead, we take a brighter view of the conditions, since these are to the advantage of the country at large. Abandoned hill farms especially will be allowed to grow up forests, and these afford their chiefest advantage to climate when they exist in elevated situations.

In such positions they not only serve to prevent evaporation of the moisture stored in the soil from rain-falls, but are more influential as rain producers than in equal extent on low lands. In such elevated position they are generally regarded as preventives of lightning, as they serve to quietly equalize the electrical conditions of the atmosphere and earth, especially in the seasons of thunderstorms.

The abandonment of these hill farms is the states' opportunity, since they may be purchased at a low figure, rescued from the greed of the dealer in cord wood and preserved forever to please the eye and to improve the climate of the country about.—Practical Electricity.

The Welsh Tongue.

The author of "Yorkshire Folk Talk" tells an amusing story of an English bishop's struggles to master the Welsh tongue. He had been appointed to the Welsh see of St. David, and on taking up his abode in Wales he engaged a native Welsh scholar to give him instruction in the language. The pronunciation, and especially the ill, bothered the bishop, and the Welshman was almost at his wit's end to explain the lingual process by which the formidable sound was to be uttered.

At last a bright thought struck him, and being very eloquent in manner he thus addressed the bishop: "Your lordship must please put your apostolic tongue to the roof of your apostolic mouth and then hiss like a goose."

Tennyson's First Memory.

Lord Tennyson, the poet laureate, is one of twelve children of a poor country clergyman, the Rev. George Clayton Tennyson, rector of Somersby, Lincolnshire. He began writing verses at a very early age. When his grandmother died, his grandfather asked him to write a poem on the sad event, and when he had read it to him, he presented him with a shilling, remarking:

"There, that's the first money you have earned by writing poetry, and take my word for it it's the last."

This was an unfortunate prediction, for he has earned more money by his poems than any other person in the history of the whole world.—London Tit-Bits.

Chickens Eat Grasshoppers.

Common barnyard fowls are very efficient destroyers of grasshoppers. In one case referred to by a special agent of the department of agriculture an almond orchard containing 300 acres was attacked by migrating swarms. The house and barn were situated in the middle of the orchard, and the chickens browsed around them over an area of six or eight acres, which by August looked like a green oasis in the desert, the trees everywhere else having been stripped of their leaves by the voracious insects.—Washington Star.

Great Discoveries.

All great discoveries come in simple form and are ushered in without music or loud rejoicing. The greatest inventions come with the least outward show and noise. The scientist generally makes his experiment while to himself and discouraged, and when he is about ready to abandon the study.—New York Telegram.
